

Inspiration is a win for me

The aha moment of the week

Photo by Katrina Wright on Unsplash

I love the picture above — yellow is my favorite color. And I'm all about affirmations and self-love these days.

February writing challenge: self-love and gratitude

The month of love — love yourself

medium.com

In fact, I recently had a breakthrough in my business planning as I look forward to the remainder of 2023. I've been absorbing and learning everything I can about online digital businesses.

The allure of the digital nomad life, where I can travel freely and experience and appreciate new cultures, is all too real for me. And it's time to take a chance and admit what I truly want in life. And to let go of what people might "expect" me to do based on education and past work experience.

So this week, as I was learning and brainstorming and fighting back the what ifs, I figured out my business model. I know what I want to do, and I'm in the process of creating the how. It feels like a major step forward.

Now, I'm not going to share it all just yet here on Medium, but I'm excited to share that I had a breakthrough. Sometimes putting yourself in the same room as others on their passion journeys makes you even more determined to bring your own passion and goals to fruition.